

A large muddy plume of sediment flows from the Mekong River Delta into the South China Sea on October 24, 2006. The monsoon season in Southeast Asia causes annual flooding of the river, depositing fertile silt on the lower flood plain in Cambodia and Vietnam. (Photograph taken by astronauts aboard the International Space Station, photograph number ISS014-E-6242.)